PARISIANS OUT OF DOORS

By F. BERKELEY SMITH
 Author of "How Paris Amuses Itself" and "The Red Tattler's Quarter"

"It is a kaleidoscopic miscellany of anecdote, grave and gay; brief bits of biography and impressionistic portraiture, charming glimpses into Parisian life and character, and, above all, descriptions of the city's chief, and too outward-looking, occupation—the art of enjoying oneself. Tourists have learned that Mr. Smith is able to initiate them into many mysteries unattainable to the guidebook hints that by more staidly respectable and professional guides."—The Globe, New York.

"Naturally, these scenes and places and the persons who add the living touches to the pictures are described from the viewpoint of one who knows them well. For Mr. Smith holds the world of Paris in the palm of his hand. This is an ideal book for summer reading."—New York Press.

"As bright and entertaining as either of his predecessors."—New York Times.

"Altogether delightful in its wanderings and its chatiness and its dexterity."—New York World.

"His descriptions of life in Paris, which he is intimate with to the smallest detail, are not merely interesting, but actually fascinating."—Standard Union, Brooklyn, N. Y.

"In a breezy, informal style, the author presents every form of out-of-door amusement in and about the capital of the world's fun."—Nashville American.

"On the land and on the water, in the gardens, the parks, the summer resorts, in the mountains and on the seashore, the author holds the reader's attention with the thorough pleasure seeker's fondling of the work."—Pittsburgh Courier.

"This volume comes like a fresh whiff from the boulevards of the gay city. There is a zest in every paragraph that is irresistible. It is written in a simple, lively, and happy style that suggests the best of French literature, merrily and the giddy promenade (and all the rest of the world of the only city). Best of all, however, the sketches at random are intimate, true, and convincing."—World News, Cleveland.

"A book appealing to the vacation sentiment and freighted besides with lively and entertaining comment on the summer life of Paris. . . . A volume of fun and interest, its pages as enlivening as French wine."—Boston Advertiser.

"IN THE HEIGHT OF THE SEASON."

12mo, cloth, illustrated with drawings by the author and several French artists and water-color from plates by F. Hopkinson Smith. $1.50 net; by mail $1.64.

"A Breath of Fresh Air in Fiction"

—New York (Va.) Luridant.

"Very far from the ordinary run of novels is this story."—Cathart and Presbyterian.

In the wilderness of books from which the reviewer culled his bouquet of mixed blossoms the commonplace, the insignificant, the promiscuous, the unoriginal, occasionally he comes upon a gem—like a rose, or a lily, or a daisy, or a violet, or a fragrant such lily is

"Reading this book is like listening to a humorous lecture by Marshall P. Wilder. It is full of brightness, and it will cheer and comfort the most morose and gloomy woman just to read it."—Baltimore American.

THE SUNNYSIDE OF THE STREET

By MARSHALL P. WILDER
 Author of "People I Have Smiled With"

"His book—like American conversation—is made up of anecdotes. He talks intimately of Richard Croker, President McKinley, President Harrison, Joseph Jefferson, Senator Dewey, Henry Watterson, Gen. Horace Porter, Augustin Daly, Henry Irving, Buffalo Bill, King Edward VII, Mrs. Langtry, and a host of other personages, large and small, and medium sized. He tells many good stories. We can recommend his book as cheerful reading."—New York Times.

A SUNNY WELCOME FROM THE CRITICS

"The range and extent of the little stories which make up this book are surprising and all are told with such a delightful freedom from egotism and in such a wholesome way that the reader is charmed with both matter and manner. . . . It is a book full of wit and gaiety, and must add to the sunshine of life for many who read it."—Salt Lake Tribune.

"Teems with anecdotes of the men and women of our time, into which Mr. Wilder throws his own share of his own optimistic personality."—Boston Herald.

"His words are an antidote to the chills of the blues, and the fumes. They are funny without being vulgar, and humorous without being stinky."—Birmingham Post, Dayton, O.

"There's a laugh on every page, and more new and good stories than have been gotten together in many a day."—Nashville American.

"The present collection of stories adds to his already great reputation."—Oregonian, Portland, Ore.

"Altogether it is a delightful book; you can pick it up and begin anywhere, but it will be impossible for you to find a page which will not amuse you and tempt you to read another, and then two more, and so on, turning back and forward as the moment serves. It will be difficult to get tired of it, and you will find it half-hour. The books that can do this are in the world in this workaday world."—Birmingham Eagle.

"A book in which shines forth the light of hope blended with the rays of keen wit."—The Call, San Francisco.

"It is replete with anecdotes, and observations relating to the humorous side of life, and it is a most interesting personality and a bright and witty chat concerning things in general."—Pittsburgh Leader.

"There's a laugh on almost every page of the book. Indeed it starts right in before one has looked any further than the cover, and it continues very well to begin much sooner."—Newark Advertiser.

"He is a most agreeable man who will not be melted by the humor of Marshall P. Wilder's 'The Sunnyside of the Street.' There are hundreds of good laughs in the book."—The Globe, New York.

"Probably Marshall P. Wilder owes his success to his ability to make folks who are not in the habit of laughing (and have enough to do by day to keep them growing) temporarily forget the burdens. The brightness and vivacity of his new book will have a like effect."—New York Times.

"Mr. Wilder has given his public a very charming and clever book. . . . So many of the wisest and wisest people are blind to the light of life, that for this God-given talent of opening the eyes of the general public to the sunshine, Mr. Wilder has the highest thanks of these heartsick and broken hearts. The man who can make the world smile is a blessing, and his literature merges the highest of arts."—Easton Daily Register, Seattle, Wash.

How it is Told

"It is wrought out carefully, and is by no means a book of ground through the book simply to be sold for cash returns. . . . A delightful story. So very good that I shall place it on my list of books to be read."—E. P. Powell, in Unity, Chicago.
